READING

This week on twitter (X) Dan Wuori reminded us that it's NEVER too soon to begin reading to your baby.

In fact, doing so while your little one is still in utero will begin familiarizing your soon-to-be new-born with the voices of the adults who will comprise their "circle of trust" after birth.

Once your baby is born, reading together daily will expose them to rich vocabulary, concepts of print, and to establish reading as both important and pleasurable... all key to their early academic success. I got such a kick out of this little one.

<https://twitter.com/DanWuori/status/1727363515051016342>

It's clear not only that her parents read to her regularly but do so with real enthusiasm and expression. What a great feeling it must be for them to watch her mimic their tender moments together.

SAFEGUARDING

Keeping Your Child Safe in Sport animation –
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iogkOeeEUQc>

The above animation has been produced as part of the NSPCC's Keeping Your Child Safe in Sport campaign designed with and for parents in mind. It introduces us to a parent who is dropping his child at training. He considers whether he has all the safeguarding information about the club that he should have before dropping his child off. The NSPCC have a range of new and updated resources for parents:

- ✓ a factsheet to help parents and carers negotiate the post-game conversation
- ✓ a factsheet giving parents and carers ideas on how to get more involved in their child's sports club or activity
- ✓ an animation about the new keeping your child safe in sport campaign
- ✓ an animation for parents on what abuse might look like in sport and how to get help
- ✓ a free, short, interactive e-learning course for parents on how to keep children safe
